

Patras (Greek: Πάτρα) is Greece's third-largest city and the regional capital of Western Greece, situated west of Athens. Like many cities in Greece, this city has a very rich history spanning from Ancient times to Roman, Byzantine, Middle Ages, and Early Modern times.

This history has greatly influenced the city's architecture, the culture and of course, the religion. As in the rest of the country, the largest denomination is the Orthodox Church, which represents the majority of the population.

The New Testament in the Bible was written in Greek, giving the Greeks a unique ability to be able to read it directly as it was written, without the pitfalls of translation. Let us pray that the Holy Spirit would give the revelation of who Jesus truly is through His Word.
